Beyond the Suffering, My Battle for Grace

One Woman's Inspiring Journey with Chronic Pain

As a woman who has lived with the cevastating effects of chronic pain for nearly 33 years, I feel blessed to share my experiences and encourage others facing a similar struggle. My journey with chronic pain began with a minor balletinjury in my right namstring when I was 21 years old, but that was only the beginning. My injury had triggered the onset of a chronic pain disease, Complex Regional Pain Syndrome.

Over the next 13 years, I fought to find a diagnosis as doctors, one after another, told me it was all in my head. I was telt bodridden for a decade and unable to speak for five years while the pain spread throughout my body and attacked my vocal cords. I felt utterly alone. This lack of belief in me, and the terrible pain I was experiencing, led to feelings of anger, depression, and eventually thoughts of suicide. I felt doubted and dismissed because I was a woman. I never imagined I might someday turn my suffering into something of value.

Through the love and support of my life partner, John, I was able to let go of the negative and began to reinvent myself. Finally, and most importantly, I accepted suffering as an intimate part of me and, indeed, my new normal. I found a voice as a healthcare reform advocate and launched For Grace to help other women with pain. Helping women heal and make positive choices has brought blessings into my life – a physical remission and emotional healing beyond anything I could have imagined. I know how precious each moment is and on a daily basis, I experience the great reward of helping people. I wouldn't change my life for anything.

Watch Her Story

It is my privilege to be able to share my story as part of the Pain Matters Documentary, produced by the Discovery Channel. Watch the full documentary to hear more about my life and the experiences of others with chronic pain. You can also watch a preview of my story.

About the Author: Cynthia Toussaint

Cynthia Toussaint is the founder and spokesperson of For Grace, an organization that promotes better care and wellness for women in pain. Toussaint championed and gave key testimony at two California Senate hearings – one was dedicated to CRPS awareness, the second explored the gender blas and chronic under-treatment of women in pain. Her current Step Therapy bill, a six-year effort at this stage, will reform an unethical prescription practice used by the health insurance industry to save money in a way that increases the suffering of California pain patients. She is the author of Battle for Greece A Memoir of Pain, Retemption and Impossible Love. For more about the author and dealing with chronic pain please visit ForGreec.org.

2015 Rx Abuse Survey Results

Physicians and People Affected by Chronic Pain Open Up About Rx Abuse

Prescription drug abuse is a serious public health problem that is having a significant impact on our society and more directly, on the relationships between people affected by pain and their physicians. 2015 Survey Results shed light on the challenges that exist in this evolving pain care landscape. How do clinicians and people with pain balance the need to talk about the impact of pain on everyday life and the risks of abuse and misuse associated with prescription opioid medications? These survey results reveal that both clinicians and people affected by chronic pain recognize their important role in helping to reduce the risk of abuse, but leel that discussing the topic can be uncomfortable. Clinicians and people with chronic pain agree that information and practical resources that help address this complex problem are greatly needed. Dig deeper into the perspectives of clinicians and people affected by pain through the survey-results infographic below.

About the Survey

A survey conducted on behalf of Tevain partnership with the U.S. Pain Foundation and the American Academy of Pain Management explores issues impacting the pain care landscape. The survey included 1,100 prescribing healthcare professionals and 1,044 adults with chronic pain taking medications to manage their pain. The survey was conducted from January 21 to February 10, 2015.

DESIGN FOR DIALOGUE

July 2015

Laura Cooley, PhD: As the Director of Education and Outreach at the American Academy on Communication in Heathcare, in very familiar with the challenges to open dialogue faced by healthcare providers and people living with pain in the exam room. I'm so piessed to be joined by Pr. Richard Payine, a practicing pain speciest at Dure Univestity and past president of the American Pain Society, to discuss this important topic. Pr. Payine, considering the challenges that conhinder open, meaningful of inversation in pain care, what would you say are chiricians' concerns?

Richard Payne, MB A 2 a spice after in pain care, I'm sourley familiar with the sense of apprehension I feel from my patients when disturbing the impact of the nain during an office vist. Pain cannot be seen or quantified, making the patient interview a key tool for monitoring pain management. Pain, though, conditivally proves to be a difficult topic of discussion, and the issue of prescription opicial dissert has only compounded the difficulty.

As chricians, we never want to imply that our patients are less than honest, upstanding, and sincere in their dealire for treatment, and we never want to sound presumption us or accusatory. Conversely, it is our understanding that many patients assume that we suspect them of abuse, and so they underreport their pain. Without an accurate picture of a patient's pain we are limited in our ability to provide them with the appropriate care.

Laura: The American Academy on Communication in Healthcare has quite a few tools they offer to physicians and patients that focus on an ideal we refer to as "relationship-centered care". With this focus, we can better ack and listen for patient concerns, respond more empether 'cally to patient emotions, and share in the decision-making process.

Dr. Payner Absolutely, Laure. The solution to this multifaceted issue is not a simple one, but it begins by strengthening the relationships between patients and doctors. For chindrans, becoming familiar with simple communication techniques and working to out them into practice can make a big difference. For instance, turning of your cell phone, not fiddling with saplops, istening empethetically, and remembering not to interrupt can help create an environment where patients fee empowered to share their feelings.

Laura: Those are some great insights, I perticulatly appreciate Dr. Payne's point of not beterrupting, Interestingly, clinicians often interrupt patients during their initial monotogue whereas most patients would tak for up to 90 seconds if uniformuted. Only 23 percent of patients feet they finish airaring their concerns with their clinicians. <sup>9,178</sup> Being mindful of allowing people affected by pain to share their full story can help clinicians and patients work together to find the right pain management plan.

Or. Payner Yes, and from this foundation we can start to have more open conversation about how patients can enduce the risks of abuse, misuse, and diversion associated with precription opioid medications. It's important to help patients undestand that our motivation for having these difficult discussions is to protect not only them, but their families, friends, and communities who may be a risk for mentional or unintercitoral abuse. It's important to provide patients with guidelines for appropriate use, storage, and classical and to discuss the penelits of opioid medications with a buse determine properties whenever available. These medications help keep precriptions in the Fands of those who need them.

Laura: Peinkvatters.com provides information and resources for physicians and people effected by pain to help miligate the risk of abuse and misuse and support origining dialogue. Practical discussion guides and a variety of downloadable resources are available for instationary embeddings in addition to a resource section specifically designed to support extraits differently for mails.

The prescription drug abuse epidemic is not a "his problem" or a "her problem", it's an.
"everyone's problem" and we all have a responsibility to address this critically important issue.
Pain Matters is committed to providing resources that support responsible pain management for both people affected by pain and heathcare professionals treating pain. While prescription pain medications play a role in managing pain for some, the reality is they have the potential to be abused and misused. Finding solutions takes time and all stakeholders, including pharmaceutical industry, government organizations, advocacy groups and even everyday citizens, can take part in helping to ensure prescription pain medications stay only in the hands of those who need them.

Most people know that keeping unused or unsecured prescription pain medication or sharing medication with friends is technically wrong, but they don't necessarily realize how their behavior could be contributing to one of America's fastest growing drug problems. These viceos depict absurd scenarios where sharing pain medication is not only common pace and intentional, but also acceptable. The videos depict an exaggerated reality that will be everyou wondering, why would anyone allow prescription pain medications to get in the wrong hands?

We encourage you not only to watch and share these videos, but use them to help foster more open conversation with your patients and your peers. Learn about all of the latest advancements to support responsible opioid use, storage and disposal.

We each have a role to play, and together, we can make a difference.

Advocating for Pain Policy, Responsible Opioid Use

In addition to the physical, emotional, and spiritual challenges of living with pain, many people also feel misunderstood by others who don't share their experiences. Unfortunately, that misunderstanding can affect legislation and policy regarding development of and access to pain medication.

Individual states typically take the lead in defining and regulating the practice of pain management through licensing boards, regulatory agencies and legislation. Without proper consideration, the policies they put in place can stand in the way of effective pain management for people living with pain.

The State Pain Policy Advocacy Network (SPPRN), a project of the Academy of Integrative Pain Management (formerly American Academy of Pain Mar agement), works at the federal and state levels to advance pain policy that supports the needs of people living with pain. To do this, we flag thousands of bills and regulations across nearly 20 topic areas, analyzing them for their potential impact on people living with pain and providers of pain care. This allows us to give advocacy leaders information about current pain-related policy proposals in their states and share tools and resources to felp them motivate other advocates.

Our organization advances integrative pain care through advocacy and education; this has been our mission since 1988. Providing quality pain care requires excellent communication between the provider and the person with pain and an individualize approach to selecting appropriate treatments. Opioid therapy is part of this armamentanium of care for some people with pain, and advocating for responsible opioid use is of utmost importance. Therefore, one area of pain policy we follow closely is the development and availability of opioid medicines with abuse-determent technology (ADT). Opioid abuse and misuse has become a topic of national concern. Many people who abuse opio do swallow them, but others crush, cut or melt their, bypassing the extended reloase mechanism present in many opioids and delivering the full dose of the drug to the bloodstream faster. Because data have shown that most prescription opioids used improperly come from medicine cabinets of friends or family, working to ensure increased access to ADT opioids may help prevent opioid-related overdose deaths by making the medications less desirable to those who would abuse them.

Healthcare providers and people living with pain recognize the risk of abuse and misuse and are eager to find a solution while protecting access to these medications in order to keep them in the hands of those who need them. Researchers and drug manufacturers are hard at work developing abuse-deterrent options that make opioid pills more difficult to tamper with and reduce their potential to be abused. In addition to this technology, healthcare professionals can provide resources and tools to help educate people experiencing or living with pain on how to appropriately use, store and dispose of opioid medications to help prevent abuse and misuse. You can learn more about abuse deterrence technology here and find information about properly using, storing and disposing of opioids here.

SPPAN is following bills in 25 states that aim to increase access to opioids with ADT by requiring insurers to cover them and/or discouraging pharmacists from substituting medicine with ADT for medicine without ADT

Penney Cowar, Founder and Executive Director of the American Chronic Pain

You're Not Alone: Finding Support from Others Living with Pain

Like most people who sustain an injury, I never imagined that the resulting pain would become part of my daily life.

For years, I was on my feet every cay managing the gournet food and catering business I owned and operated. In the spring of 2003, I severed my sciatic nerve in a workplace accident, leaving me with degenerative disc disease. I was later diagnosed with complex regional pain syndrome. (CRPS), which can cause continuous burning or throbbing pain and sensitivity to touch. I had multiple surgeries and tried different treatments for my pain, but nothing worked.

The constant pain put a huge strain on my personal life, I got divorced, and my relationships with my skishlings suffered. Ultimately, once I accepted that the pain was chronic, I had to sell my business.

Once I realized my pain wasn't going away, I started to look for support. I knew there must be other people in similar situations, and I thought it would be helpful to talk to them about our shared experiences.

As one of the nearly 100 million people in the U.S. who are living with pain, I quickly realized that the need for resources and support was great. I stanted the Connecticut Pain Foundation in my home state to provide a community for people living with pain. Interest spread, and I soon helped the Connecticut Pain Foundation grow into the IJ. S. Whin Executables, a nonprofit dedicated to serving people who live with pain and their caregivers.

With more than 70,000 members nationwide, the U.S. Fain Foundation advocates on behalf of Americans living with pain. We track bit is and engage with government officials on a regular basis to make sure the voices of people living with pain are heard when national pain policy is written. We have supported legislation in several states that encourages pharmacists to honor doctors' prescriptions for pain medication, and we are working to get similar legislation passed across the country.

In an effort to raise awareness and eliminate the stigms that surrounds people living with pain, the U.S. Pain Foundation has started projects like the "INvisible Project," a travelling display that brings to life the many faces of people living with pain through real photos. We also work to bring the pain community together through programs like Herces of Heelling, a private, online support community, and our Pain Ambassador Network, which relies on a network of volunteer advocates to be the volce of people in pain and who give hope to their communities.

While I am honored to have the privilege to lead a national pain organization, I consider myself first and foremost to be a person who lives with pain. I relate to the struggle and isolation pain brings, and I know how important it is to feel heard and understood. The U.S. Pain Foundation was created by people with pain for people with pain. Everyone involved with our organization either has pain or is a caregiver of a person with pain.

I believe that if we work together, we can reduce the suffering pain brings with it, along with the isolation, depression, stress and sigma it involves.

Paul Glenc has become a strong force in the chronic pain awareness movement. His mission and message in life are clear—to empower and support those living with pain. He believes that by exploring new ways to cope, those with pain can find personal answers that enable them to grow and live once more with meaning and purpose.

In 2003, Paul suffered a workplace injury that severed his sciatic nerve and left him with degenerative disc disease.

After multiple failed back surgeries, grueling physical therapy and various pain management througher three coacts surgeries, grueing physical crieral and various pain management throughers, he came to accept that his pain was chronic. In time, Paul discovered that he had a new calling in life — helping chronic pain survivors.

Living with degenerative disc cisease, failed back syndrome and complex regional pain syndrome for over three years, Paul eventually founded the Connecticut Pain Foundation in 2006, which later grew into the U.S. Pain Foundation, U.S. Pain exists to connect, inform, empower and advocate for the pain community. In addition to his work with U.S. Pain, Paul Is on the Advisory Board for PainPathways magazine, the co-administrator of Herbes of Healing and co-director of the INvisible Project. As part of his work with U.S. Pain, he advocates for and supports legislation at the state and federal level that a lims to ensure access to quality pain management. #### Going from Patient to Person: How I Live Fully With Pain

When you live with chronic pain, it can consume your life, making it seem like your whole existence is defined by your pain. On top of that, much of what you hear about chronic pain in the news is overwhelmingly negative, with stories about pain being associated with opioid abuse and addiction.

But there's an untold story out there that is painfully familiar to the nearly 100 million people living with pain.

At any moment, you could be walking down the street next to someone who is living with pain and not even know it. Pain is an impible and unprecitable monster. People who live with it may have good days and bad days. So for those who don't live with pain, the cuestion becomes, "You could do this yesterday, why can't you do it today?" and that can make people with pain feel misunderstood and put them on the defense.

I know firsthand the frustrations that accompany living with pain. I've had chronic pain since 1974, and it took me six years to find a diagnosis. I fer tilke a 30-year-old trapped in an 80-year-old body, and it was very discouraging. I didn't felly realize what a huge personal accomplishment it was just learning to live with my pain until after my diagnosis when I took part in a pain management program at the Cleveland Clinic. For the very first time, I knew I wasn't the only person in the world with this kind of pain. Before going there I solated and shut myself off from my family and friends. The program taught me how to live with my pain, providing the self-management skills I needed to live a full life in spite of my pain. The validation and support of others who live with pain is a critically important step in learning to live with pain.

I founded The American Chronis Pain Association (ACPA) in 1980 to provide that comfort for people living with pain. When I left my pain management program, I was eager to maintain my wellness and not allow pain to rule my life again. I placed a notice in my church bulletin and quickly bond others in similar situations. One support group quickly bossomed into many.

Today, the ACPA organizes several hundred support groups, as well as providing resources and tools to help people manage their pain. We offer communication tools to help people talk to their doctors about pain, insperie from more than 3C years of supporting people with pain and information about chronic pain treatment.

It is possible to live life beyond simply existing with pain. With a balanced approach to pain management that may include medication, but also teaches you to listen to your body, manage stress, pace activities, and understand your emotions, you can live fully. To find tools and resources or connect with others living with pain, visit were attached, erg.

About the Author: Penney Cowan

Fenney Cowan is the founder and Chief Executive Officer of the American Chronic Pain Association (ACPA). She herself is a person with chronic pain and established the ACPA in 1980 to help others living with the condition. The ACPA provides peer support and education in pain management skills to people with pain and their families. The ACPA also works to build awareness about chronic pain among professionals, decision makers and the general public.

She served as: Consumer Representative for the FDA/CDER Anesthetic and Analgesic Drug. Products Advisory Committee (AADPAC) for 2012 and was appointed to Interagency Pain Research Coordinating Committee of the National Institute of Health from 2013 to 2015.

Cowan began the Part there for Understanding Pain Campaign in 2002 in an attempt to raise awareness about the need to better understand, assess, and treat pain. There are more than 80 partner organizations. The campaign, under the direction of the ACPA, successfully established September as Pain Awareness Month.

Managing Chronic Pain

The pain experience is individual. Chronic pain is defined by the International Association for the Study of Pain as "a persistent pain that is not amenable, as a rule, to treatments based upon specific remedies or to the routine methods of pain control." It's a serious medical condition that may greatly affect people leaving them unable to work, maintain relationships, or participate in daily tasks. I

Chronic pain can affect anyone. The Institute of Medicine estimated that 100 million American adults are impacted by chronic pain, which includes people who reported having "severe pain, moderate pain, joint pain, arthritis, or functional limitation."

Understanding Opioid Abuse & Misuse

Now than 12 million people reported using prescription pain medications nonmedically in 2010. <sup>30</sup>
That number encompasses both abuse and misuse. The abuse and misuse of prescription pain medications were responsible for more than 475,000 emergency department visits in 2009, a number that nearly doubled in just five years. <sup>30</sup> Further, opicid overdoses in particular are increasingly due to the abuse of prescription painkillers. <sup>3</sup>

Opioid Abuse

Abuse is a nonmedical use of a drug, repeatedly, or even sporadically, for the positive psychoactive effects it produces. <sup>12</sup> The most common form of opioid abuse is swallowing a number of intact pills or tablets to achieve a feeling of euphoria. <sup>5</sup> While this is the most widespread form of abuse, opioid an algesics can be abused in a number of ways <sup>5</sup>:

- Swallowed whale
- · Crushed and swallowed
- · Crushed and shorted
- · Crushed and smoked
- Crushed, dissolved; and injected

3.27%

Percent of patients using treated with chronic optioid the apy withhigh fixethood of 26 abuse/excitation

Alcohol-Induced dose dumping, or the associated intake of alcoholic beverages together with oral controlled release opioid formulations, is another form of abuse that may result in an uncontrolled and immediate drug release.<sup>12</sup>

Opioid Misuse

Misuse is using the prescription drug for a reason other than for which it was prescribed. <sup>13</sup> The key differentiator being the drug is not being used for an intentional high; so it is labeled misuse rather than abuse. Misuse can also take many forms, for example <sup>13</sup>:

- Using a drug for a different condition than that for which the drug is prescribed.
- Taking more drug than prescribed or at different dosing intervals
- Using a drug not prescribed for them-or other therapeutic purposes

Understanding Chronic Pain

Chronic and Acute Pain

Pain is a serious medical condition that can impact anyone at any time. Pain that leads only for a short period of time is called acute pain; it's a normal feeling that typically alerts us to a possible injury. Chronic pain is very different. Chronic pain is often defined as any pain that leads for 12 weeks or longer. According to the Institute of Medicine, chronic pain is estimated to affect approximately 100 million American actolis. 5

Chronic pair, may be caused by an initial injury or there may be an longoing cause, like a medical illness. But for some people, there may also be no clear cause. Other health problems, such as fatigue, sleep disturbance, decreased appetits, and mood changes, often accompany chronic pain. Chronic pain may affect people's ability to participate in daily tasks.

Finding the Right Chronic Pain Care Plan for You

Working with Your Doctor

How chronic pain is experienced is unique to every person. There is no test to measure how chronic pain feels or exactly where it is located. So, your doctor will rely on you to tell him or her how the pain feels, how often you experience the pain, and where exactly it hurts. Defining pain as sharp or dull, constant, on and-off, burning, or aching may give the best clues to the cause of the pain. These descriptions are part of what is called the pain history. Your healthcare team will usually start your appointment by discussing your pain so they understand your pain history.

A Pain Treatment Team

Since chronic pain may occur in a variety of locations in the body and for many different reasons, it is important for you to work with your doctor to identify the causes and symptoms of your pain to find the treatment plan that works for you. If the best treatment plans are failured to each individual person with input from healthcare team members. If they be helpful to work with several healthcare professionals who have different training backgrounds and an inderstanding of chronic pain. The person in pain and his or her loved ones must also be actively involved in the treatment plan.

Types of Chronic Pain Management

The overall goal of chronic pain management is to reduce the pain to help people return to cally living. "While there are a watery of options available to treat chronic pain, it usually cannot be cured, only managed." A variety of options exist for you and your pain care team to create the treatment plan that is right for you." These options include."

Appropriate Prescription Opioid Medication Use, Storage & Disposal

Using Prescription Opioid Medicines Appropriately

Following guidelines, on appropriate use, storage, and disposal of your prescription pain meditations is important. Prescription drug abuse is a serious public bealth issue. <sup>3</sup> Remember, the person who was prescribed a prescription opioid medication isn't always the only one who is at risk for abuse.

Uses

- · Take medications only as prescribed
- · Be aware of risks
- · Understand inappropriate use
- . Never give prescription medicines to anyone else

Storage<sup>14,15</sup>

- · Hide or lock up opioid medications to avoid access by family, friends, or houseguests
- Keep prescription medications in their original packaging so it is clear for whom the medications were prescribed and to save the directions for appropriate use

Disposal15

- Opioids may be disposed of through community-sponsored take-back programs
- If there are none available in your area, follow the Office of Drug Control National Policy recommendations for environmentally friendly disposal
- Learn more about appropriate use, storage and disposal of prescription opioid medications. Many communities also host drug take-back days to make proper prescription drug disposal cosy

CM. Backheetis Straightee

As someone who has itedicated my career to what I consider to be both a human and economic crisis in America, I have witnessed Sirst-hand the impact is roomle pain can have on the lives of people living with para and their tomities. I was privaged to be a part of the Pain Metter decumentary film, produced by the Discovery Channel. The film provides real stokes and inspiration-through the these of people and families affected by pain, it am pleased to be among the industry thought leaders who will provide insights related to the evolving pain care landscape and potential implications for people who live with Chronic pain and those who care for them.

Pain Perspectives provides a platform for the pair community to contribute opinions about key moments, including federal and state-level regulatory changes, professional medical conferences, devision ments, in the science of abuse deterrence technology to address the challenges of opinion disture, and advocacy activities. This rotating seriesyof presentations will be available in multiple formats, such as articles, C&As, and videos, The many values of Pain Perspectious will reme reporter to raise awareness and deepen understanding of treating this often missunderstood cardificion.

Welcome to the first edition of Paint Perspectives

Understanding Chronic Pain

Pain is a serious medical condition that can impact anyone at any time. Pain that lasts only for a short period of time is called acute pain; it's a normal feeling that typically alerts us to a possible injury. Chronic pain is very different. Chronic pain is often defined as any pain that lasts for 12 weeks or longer. According to the institute of Medicine, chronic pain is estimated to affect approximately 100 million American adults.

Chronic pain may be caused by an initial in jury or there may be an ongoing cause, like a medical illness. Sut for some people, there may also be no clear cause. Other health problems, such as fatigue, sleep disturbance, decreased appetite, and mood changes, often accompany chronic pain. Chronic pain may affect people's ability to participate in daily tasks. 3.
